PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY Harney, Hughes & Co.

SUNDAY ..... DEC. 12, 1858.

We don't know that it is any business of the Courier to notice what we say of the President's Message. We, of course, foresaw what the Courier would say of the Message. An administration paper is bound to approve, to be delighted, to be gratified. It is not its mission to criticise. Democratic papers, however, must look to the principles and doctrines of the party. If the President's recommendations are not in accordance with the creed his party has always held, it is the business of an editor who will do justice to his party and the public to notice it. We are not surprised that the editor of the Courier approves the protective doctrines of the Message, and the recommendation of a bankupt law : for these doctrines he has advocated. perhaps, in times past; but he will hardly specify the items he approves. Will he tell his readers that he approves the President's recommendation of specific duties, and his undisguised partiality for the old heresy of protection? Will inform his readers whether he approves the commendation of a bankrupt law applicable banking institutions? We deny the power Congress to pass such a law. It would not e a general bankrupt law, in the sense intended by the federal constitution. The very purpose of such a law, as explained by the President, is not that of a bankrupt law at all. It is designed to regulate the currency, and may be used to nullify the power of the States to the states and Foreign and Pomostic Finite, of over to charter banking institutious and fix the conditions of their existence. But, if Congress had the power, its exercise is Inexpedient, and the execution of such a law impracticable.

The President, and the administration papers generally, may go off into these anti-Democratic peresies, but the mass of the Democratic party will not follow them. We utterly repudiated both these recommendations. We have on posed such doctrines all our lives, and so has he Democratic party.

We have another objection to the doctrines of this Message. Notwithstanding all the clamor against equatter sovereignty, by the triends of the administration, par excellence, they hold the doctrine in the most objection-

They have areated the Lecompton Conven tion as a sovereign body, and held its work as above any animadversious in Congress. The President says in his Message :
